

Robert Trono

Biography

Robert (Bob) Trono is Vice President and Chief Security Officer for Lockheed Martin Corporation. In this capacity, he is responsible for leading the corporation's total asset protection, including people, classified information and materials, intellectual and physical property, and facilities in the United States and around the world. He has executive leadership responsibility for the security of international employees, travelers, and facilities; crisis management; counter-intelligence and counter-espionage; corporate flight operations; and workplace violence prevention and response programs. Trono also chairs the corporation's Internal Investigations Steering Committee.

Prior to joining Lockheed Martin, Trono served as the Deputy Director of the United States Marshals Service. As Deputy Director, Trono was the Chief Operating Officer for the Marshals Service and oversaw a budget of $825 million, and 10,000 full time and contract employees. Among its many and varied missions, the United States Marshals Service's primary responsibility is the security of 2,200 federal judges, 5,500 federal prosecutors and more than 400 facilities throughout the nation. The Marshals Service also manages the Witness Security Program, which protects, relocates, and gives new identities to threatened federal witnesses.

Trono also served in the Department of Justice as Senior Counsel to the Deputy Attorney General of the United States. In this role, he advised the Deputy Attorney General on a wide variety of matters and had oversight responsibility for several agencies, including the Marshals Service and the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

Prior to his Main Justice service, Trono was an Assistant United States Attorney in the Eastern District of Virginia. He handled a number of high-profile public corruption matters, including the successful prosecutions of four city council members. He also successfully prosecuted many violent drug enterprises, including 30 members of a gang responsible for more than 20 murders.

Trono also served as a state prosecutor in multiple positions in Richmond, VA. During his time as a state prosecutor, he prosecuted a wide variety of major felony cases and served as the lead prosecutor in more than 130 jury trials.

Currently, Trono is an Adjunct Professor of Corporate Security, Counterintelligence, and Counterespionage at the College of William and Mary School of Law. While in Richmond, he was an Adjunct Professor of Trial Advocacy at the University of Richmond School of Law and was a frequent lecturer on trial tactics and criminal justice matters.

Trono was educated at the University of Richmond, where he earned a bachelor's of science in business administration, graduating with honors, and at the William and Mary School of Law, where he earned the Award for Academic Achievement in Economic Analysis of Law. He resides in Virginia with his wife and two sons.
